Leaving the Bones Behind, is a suspense novel set in the Northwest in the state of Montana, with threads leading the reader to Seattle, to Long Island, to Sparta, Tennessee, to the Alagnak River in Alaska, to Japan, and Singapore. A work of fiction, the subject matter is sure to strike a chord with many readers—especially baby boomers. It's sort of a Michael Crichton-esque take on a Nicholas Sparks story, The Notebook. This thought-provoking novel is about the ravages of Alzheimer's disease, the ethical dilemmas inherent in scientific advances, and the search for a dignified space in-between. Readers will be absorbed in Gary's story from the very first page, and should be prepared to experience a full range of emotions as they work their way toward the astonishing conclusion of Leaving the Bones Behind.

Approximately 70% of Alzheimer's disease patients receive care at home.

The average unpaid healthcare provider is a woman, 48 years of age, struggling to provide income to a family of 4 while providing care to an elder parent or close relative. There are 5.3 million victims of Alzheimer's in the US and 10 million unpaid caregivers. That means this disease is consuming 15 million lives, now. When the last of the baby boomers (like me) turn 65, the year will be 2020. That's less than 10 years. By then, there will be 40 million lives in the clutches of this disease: 14 million victims and 26 million unpaid caregivers.
